Keeping Drinking Water Safe for Suffolk County

Farmingdale, New York- Legislator Sarah Anker attended the Long Island Water Conference (LIWC) legislative breakfast on April 24 at Bethpage State Park in Farmingdale. The conference is an alliance of 47 Nassau and Suffolk public drinking water purveyors and other industry professionals that supply water to over three million people. The organization, founded 50 years ago, is dedicated to ensure safe and clean water for Long Island.

Discussions included maintaining safe water infrastructure, water contamination by chemicals and pharmaceuticals, remediation toxic underground plumes and legislation needed to protect our drinking water.

"Keeping our drinking water safe and clean is one of Suffolk County's top priorities," said Legislator Anker. "The water conference brings together many levels of government in an effort to address Long Island's top water issues and goals."
